SIDEKICK LOGISTICS

For any small business that lives on the phone: detailers, cleaners, tutors, trainers, photographers, accountants, consultants, repair shops

Donna picks up when you can't. Books the job. Texts the customer. Done.

Donna is an AI receptionist who answers your business line 24 hours a day, knows what you offer and what it costs, books real openings on your calendar, sends the confirmation by text, and takes a proper message for anything else. Set up in an afternoon. No tech skills needed.

Hear her yourself. Call Donna at Sidekick Logistics and ask her anything about the office.

THE PROBLEM

Every missed call is a customer who called the next name on the list.

You are on a ladder, in a car, with a client, or finally asleep. The phone rings anyway. Most people will not leave a voicemail, and most will not call back.

Most callers
hang up on voicemail and try someone else. The job goes to whoever answered.

Same 5 questions
over and over: how much, how long, do you come to me, when can you do it, how do I pay.

Zero hours in the day left for callbacks, confirmations and reminders. So no-shows happen.

WHAT OWNERS TOLD US THEY WANT

- Someone who answers like they work there: knows the services, the prices, the hours, the area you cover.
- Real bookings on a real calendar, not "someone will call you back".
- A text confirmation the customer can actually find, and a reminder the day before so they show up.
- A clear message when it is something only you can answer, with the number to call back.
- No software to learn. No one on your payroll. Nothing to babysit.

> CALLER "Hi, how much is a full detail, and do you come to the house?"
> DONNA "A full detail inside and out is two hundred twenty dollars and takes about three hours, and yes, we come to you anywhere in Arlington, Mansfield, Grand Prairie or Fort Worth. Want me to find you a time?"
> CALLER "Saturday morning if you can."
> DONNA "Saturday I have eight, nine, ten, ten thirty or eleven thirty. Which works? Ten it is. And who should I put this under? Thanks, Marcus. What's the address where you'd like us to come? Got it, twenty-two ten Oak Hollow Drive. You're all set for Saturday at ten, I've texted you a confirmation."

That is a real test call. Donna answered from the business's own price list, offered only open times, took the address, and sent the text.

WHAT DONNA DOES

A front desk that works nights, weekends and holidays.

Answers every call

- Picks up in under two rings, 24/7, in 25 languages. Switches when the caller does.
- Introduces herself with your business name, in the voice you pick.
- Recognizes returning customers by their number and remembers what they usually book.
- Only says what you approved. If she doesn't know, she takes a message instead of guessing.

Answers the questions

- Prices, how long things take, your hours, your service area, how to pay, cancellation policy, what to have ready.
- Paste your website or type a few answers once. Donna turns them into replies you approve before she uses them.
- Can text the caller your address with a map link, your hours, or a price so they have it in writing.

Books real appointments

- Knows each service and how long it takes, so a 3-hour job never gets squeezed into a 30-minute gap.
- Offers only open times from your hours and your calendar, in the window the caller asked for ("Saturday morning").
- Takes the name and, for work at the customer's place, the address, and reads it back.
- Reschedules and cancels existing bookings too, found by the caller's number.
- Syncs to Google or Microsoft calendar if you use one.

Texts like a good assistant

- Confirmation by text from your own number the moment it's booked, with the address.
- Reminder the day before: "Reply C to confirm, R to reschedule, or CANCEL". Donna handles those replies herself.
- "Running 10 minutes late" from a customer reaches you by text.
- Anything else they text lands in your Inbox, where you can text back with one tap.

Takes a proper message

- Who, what, best number, in the caller's own words. Emailed to you and kept in the dashboard.
- Urgent calls are flagged so you see them first.
- Transfers live to your cell during the hours you choose; takes the message when you can't pick up.

Lets customers book themselves

- A clean booking page with your logo and colors, verified by a one-time code so no one books under someone else's name.
- Put the Book button on Google, Instagram, Facebook and your website in a few taps; print the QR code for the counter.
- Donna can text the link to anyone who would rather book later.

KEEPING CUSTOMERS

Donna doesn't just take the call. She brings people back.

Reminders that cut no-shows

The day before, by text and email, with the service, the time and the place. Customers confirm with one letter. If they need to move, Donna offers the open times and moves it on the spot.

Thank-you and review asks

A few hours after the visit, a short text thanking them with your Google review link. One ask per customer, never to someone who cancelled.

"Time for your next one"

Set how often a service is due (every 6 weeks, every spring) and Donna sends a friendly nudge with a one-tap link that lands straight on that service.

Win-back

Customers you haven't seen in a while get one warm note with a link to book. Donna never nags: one touch, then she waits.

Waitlist that fills cancellations

When someone cancels, the first person waiting who fits that opening and wanted that time of day is booked automatically and texted.

Your day at a glance

Open the dashboard on your phone: today's appointments in order, who's coming, their notes, a "Running late" button that texts them, and "Text customer" for anything else.

AND A CUSTOMER LIST THAT BUILDS ITSELF

Every caller becomes a contact with their number, history, notes and preferences. Import the people you already have from your phone or a spreadsheet. Export any time. It's your list.

SET UP

Thirty minutes, mostly typing in what you already know.

1. What kind of business, and what's it called.
   Donna starts with the right manners for your trade and a starter list of the questions customers ask, for you to fill in.

2. Your hours and where you work.
   Open days and times. Whether customers come to you or you go to them.

3. What people can book.
   Name, how long, price. "Full detail, 3 hours, $220." That's it.

4. Who to reach.
   Your cell for transfers during the day, your email for messages.

5. Go live.
   You get a local number and your own Donna email address. Forward your line, or print the new number on your truck. Call it yourself first.

Included

- Local phone number with texting
- Donna's own email address for your business
- Booking page with QR code and share links
- Confirmations, reminders, review asks, rebook nudges
- Customer list, call transcripts, Inbox
- Dashboard on any phone or computer
- A real person at Sidekick Logistics to help you set up

Works with what you have

Google or Microsoft calendar. Your current email inbox (forward it and Donna answers that too). Your existing phone number can forward to Donna, so nothing on your signs or cards has to change.

Grows with you

Add a second person and Donna books with whoever is free. Salons and property managers get Donna with their trade's own playbook built in.

BUILT FOR TRUST

- Donna never makes up a price, a policy or a time. If it is not in what you approved, she says she'll have you follow up.
- She reads back names, numbers and addresses so they're right the first time.
- Every call is transcribed and summarized for you. Every text she sends is in your Inbox.
- Customers can opt out of texts with one word, and she respects it.
- Your customers and your knowledge stay in your account. Nothing is shared between businesses.
